He stated that Judge/Executive, Steve Pendery, along with Boone County Judge/Executive Gary Moore, and Kenton County Judge/Executive Kris Knochelmann, presented to a full audience of several hundred people. Judge Pendery provided an overview of community developments and emphasized the importance of regional collaboration and leadership. Commissioner Besecker remarked that the unified leadership demonstrated by the three Judges was clearly evident and well received by the audience, and that the event was very well done.

Commissioner Tom Lampe said that collectively, the three counties represent a significant force within the Commonwealth of Kentucky in terms of economic development, job creation, and tourism. He emphasized that while each county operates independently and prioritizes the interests of its own residents, the counties work cooperatively and collaboratively to strengthen the region as a whole. Commissioner Lampe also noted that the Eggs and Issues event was the largest attended to date, with a capacity crowd of approximately 400 people, and said that the event was well done.

Commissioner Brian Painter said that the regional partnership referenced by his fellow commissioners has resulted in significant cost savings for the three counties over the past several years, particularly through shared investments in radio communications systems, and tower infrastructure that cross county boundaries. He explained that these cooperative efforts improved communication coverage across the region rather than limiting resources to individual counties. Commissioner Painter explained that during the COVID-19 pandemic, the three Judge/Executives identified gaps in broadband access and worked together to utilize federal grant funding and worked together and as a result every address in Campbell County now has fiber-optic infrastructure, an achievement he described as remarkable and unique nationwide.
